The first patch released by Microsoft today patched vulnerabilities in the Windows Common Log File System (CLFS) driver, as well as two other zero-day flaws in the Desktop Window Manager (DWM) library and the Microsoft Scripting Engine (MSE). This update is important for protecting against privilege escalation attacks that take advantage of these vulnerabilities.